

FlyAnywhere opens up GA travel

Doug Nancarrow

FLYANYWHERE HAS LAUNCHED a website that delivers general aviation flight options for travelers.

The site brings together the general public, aviation businesses and pilots, and travel agents and concierges in order to streamline the air travel process and make it easier to book a flight on a non-commercial aircraft.

Commercial airline schedules and routes are strict, limiting and can constrain options for air travel. In Australia; and while there are other options, they may not be as obvious or mainstream.

FlyAnywhere aims to change that, because general aviation cannot only expand travel options, but it also allows for a more personal connection between travelers and their pilots - one that large airlines simply cannot provide.

Plus, with a more direct approach to booking travel, the industry will only benefit as a result.

With more than 1800 airports in Australia the infrastructure is already in place, and FlyAnywhere wants to put it to better use and bring it straight to the general public.

With FlyAnywhere's website, the company has changed the game when it comes to convenient air travel by making it easy and attractive for travel agents to link their travelers with these options when traveling to Australia.

This ensures that there is a steady pipeline of new and relevant leads for the industry as a whole.

With that, the aviation businesses and pilots are in place to benefit significantly from the increased demand for their services which, in turn, will create more revenue and ultimately drive and reinforce the growth of the General Aviation industry in Australia.

FlyAnywhere's Robert Brus.

The process is simple, by filling out the travel requirements on the website, users are able to quickly locate a pilot for their travel needs.

They can receive up to five quotes and communicate directly with the aircraft pilot. With FlyAnywhere's cutting edge technology, it's easier than ever to sync up travelers with the General Aviation industry.

Most people on the go are simply unaware of the possibilities offered by flying on a small plane or helicopter; and FlyAnywhere bridges this gap by providing a simple and intuitive planning tool that reveals all the possible travel options they've been missing.

FlyAnywhere removes the middleman, and quotes are supplied to consumers directly by aviation businesses and pilots.
